

Dr. Pamela A. Wilson

PRESIDENT

Dr. Pamela A. Wilson hails from Chicago, Illinois, and is a founding member and current President of the International Association of Military Women of Color (I AM WOC), where she has been instrumental in shaping the organization's mission, strengthening its visibility, and advancing advocacy for women of color in the military. Known for her collaborative, team-focused leadership, she has led strategic initiatives, expanded digital engagement, forged key partnerships, and championed the C.R.O.W.N. Act, influencing updated Army hair policies and making her purple hair a symbol of empowerment.

A retired Army veteran and former Religious Affairs Specialist, Dr. Wilson holds a Ph.D. from Trident University International, an MPA from Troy State University, and degrees from Chicago State University and Kennedy-King College. Her career spans military service, community leadership, authorship, and national advocacy, including service with National Women Veterans United and memberships in several prominent civic organizations. As President of I AM WOC, she oversees governance, strategic planning, and public representation, advancing a vision rooted in empowering women to mentor and support past, present, and future generations of women veterans.
